LEGAL RULES GOVERNING THE DELEGATION OF POWERS (COMMON LAW)

ANNEXURE A*JANUARY 2010

Based on L. Baxter, Administrative Law (1984), Y. Burns, Administrative Law Under The 1996 Constitution and M. Wiechers, Administrative Law (1985)

1. A power that has been "assignment" is fully transferred. A functionary who assigned a power may not exercise the power that has been assigned. The functionary to whom a power has been assigned is fully responsible for the exercising thereof. "Assignment" of powers is sometimes also referred to as the decentralisation of powers.
2. A power that has been "delegated" is not fully transferred. A functionary who delegated a power (delegator/ delegans) may exercise the power himself or herself and remains fully responsible for the exercising thereof. However, once the functionary to whom the power has been delegated to (delegatee/ delegate) has exercised the power in relation to a particular case the delegator may no longer exercise the power in relation to that instance. "Delegation" of powers is sometimes also referred to as the deconcentration of powers.
3. A power is not conferred upon a government department generally. A power is conferred upon a functionary, for example, "the Administrator", "the MEC responsible for Local Government", "the Head of Department" or "the Development Tribunal".
4. A power that is conferred upon a functionary may as a rule only be exercised by that functionary. This is because there is a danger that if delegations are allowed the power may be exercised by a person who is not as qualified or as politically or otherwise responsible as the person who the legislature has in mind. The delegation of powers in the absence of express or implied authority in a law is considered to be the abdication of authority.
5. Powers delegated to a functionary may not be delegated further by that functionary. This does not prevent the functionary from obtaining the assistance of others in exercising the power or making the decision and obtaining the assistance of others with the implementation of the decision.
6. Where a discretionary power has been conferred upon an organ of state, the organ of state may not delegate that power unless expressly empowered to do so in a law. A statutory body may therefore not delegate its powers further. The Town Planning Ordinance, 1949, provides expressly for the further delegation of certain powers of the KZNPDC.

7. Abdication of powers can occur in three ways: Acting through unlawful delegation, acting under dictation from another person or body and failure to act.
8. A power may not be delegated to more than one functionary in the absence of an express provision in an empowering law.
9. Where the law provides for institutional separation it must be honoured. A functionary cannot monitor itself or make a recommendation to itself.
10. A functionary must be appointed properly and must meet all the prescribed requirements relating qualifications, experience, conditions of the delegation etc. An action taken by a functionary who has not been appointed properly or who did not meet all the requirements and conditions of the delegation is invalid.
11. Where an appointment is personal, like the appointment of a member of a statutory body or a designated officer, another person may not exercise the appointees powers.
12. Where several persons are appointed to exercise a power, for example a statutory body, they must act together as a body, unless the law expressly provides otherwise. The body may appoint a subcommittee to investigate certain facts but must exercise the discretionary power itself. The law often specifies a quorum of members who must be present when a decision is taken.
13. A statutory body cannot take over the powers of another functionary. Where the law empowers a designated officer to extend the time in which plans must be lodged with the Surveyor General the Development Tribunal cannot grant the extension of time.
14. The existence of an implied power to delegate depends on the following factors:
  - (a) the degree of devolution of the power;
  - (b) the importance of the original delegatee;
  - (c) the complexity and extent of discretion;
  - (d) the impact of the power; and
  - (e) practical necessity.
15. A power may be delegated where a delegation is limited and the delegator retains full control over the final decision.

16. A power may be delegated where the delegation will ensure that the decision is taken by a better qualified or experienced functionary.
  17. Powers which require little or no discretion are usually delegable (mechanical acts).
  18. Powers which require significant discretion are usually not delegable, especially in the case of unguided discretions (no criteria in the law, no standards, no recommendation that must be considered etc).
  19. Powers which may infringe on a persons rights are usually not delegable.
